

The Archaeological Institute of America
Western Illinois Society and the Department of Classics present

5,000 Years of Native American Moundbuilding Traditions

Meg Kassabaum

Assistant Professor of Anthropology,
University of Pennsylvania

For more than 5,000 years, Native people have marked the landscape of what is now the United States with earthen monuments. This history is explored in a new exhibit at the Penn Museum in Philadelphia. This talk will discuss the long history of moundbuilding, the process of designing the exhibit, and Meg Kassabaum's current research in the Lower Mississippi Valley.

Monday, February 26, 2018

7:30 PM

Pattee Auditorium,
Center for Science and Business 100
Monmouth College